Description:

In THE BORROWED WORLD, Franklin Horton showed us an America brought to its knees by a nationwide terror attack. The target? The American infrastructure. Cell phone connections were sporadic. Electrical power had failed. Mortar attacks on major fuel refineries had created a gas shortage, stranding travelers throughout the country. One of those stranded travelers, Jim Powell, and his group of coworkers were frantically trying to make their way home using just the gear on their backs and whatever other means they found at their disposal. It was a journey wracked with violent, deadly encounters and exhausting physical demands, pushing each of them to the brink of their abilities. Meanwhile, on the other side of Virginia, Jims family was facing their own struggle as desperate neighbors began to turn against each other with increasing brutality. In the second installment in this series, ASHES OF THE UNSPEAKABLE, we find Jim and his group still struggling to reach home. While just a few days have passed since the attack, the group finds that their country is descending into a vicious, chaotic landscape. While they fight to close the distance between themselves and their loved ones, they cannot avoid the growing number of people who have realized that they can do whatever they want in a world where there are no longer any legal consequences for their actions. At home, Jims family is forced into hiding after the local jail discharges its starving inmates, leading to the arrival of new, extremely violent presence in their community. The stranger begins a deadly campaign to drive families from their homes and take their possessions. Jims wife, Ellen, must struggle to keep her family safe, while each night a neighbor’s home is burned to the ground.

Book number two of a three book series. I purchased the POD (print on demand) version in trade paperback. There may be more books in the series past number three, I do not know. I have purchased number three and am reading it now. Basically, the plot of the story is that ISIS sends 100 small teams of operatives to destroy valuable infrastructure in the USA such as refineries, electric grid auto-transformers, bridges, dams, and internet peering points in one night. Life in America immediately transforms for worse as the electrical grids and communication grids die and the various governmental agencies seize the remaining automobile and truck fuel. Food immediately becomes scarce as the stores are cleaned out and there is no fuel for the trucks to resupply them. The level of violence in the book is simply amazing as our protagonists are walking, riding, and walking to their respective homes 200+ miles away from Richmond, Virginia where they were attending a conference. The journey home takes weeks. My former USMC son believes that most people have less than three days of food in the house based on his experiences with his fellow Marines families. That does not bode well for national shortages of food and fuel to get it around the country. Even getting home was not kind to our surviving protagonists as their homes are very subject to people looking for food and weapons. That RV park down the road gets pretty rough when people are starving. Or coming down off their Prozac, meth, etc.

classic Seriss town. Nice read also catches you up on what happens in the time from him being small to an older child. 32 pages include teacher notes, science notes, musical score. It is a fine read as a murder mystery, but much of the fun comes from Rankin's study of the darkly cynical Detective Inspector Rebus's interactions with a wide range of G8 visitors and with the local troublemakers they bring out. Although I did not agree with every word the author wrote all of her words have enriched my spiritual life. It is a wonderful story about facing one's fears.
